CWIT is dedicated to training and advocating for tradeswomen and women and girls interested in high-wage, high-skill careers in the manufacturing, construction and transportation sectors of the economy. Our direct service programs explore and prepare women and girls for careers as electricians, carpenters, welders and other traditionally male dominated careers. The Tradeswomen of Tomorrow program explores these careers with young women ages 13-18. The Girls at Work program combines a hands-on workshop with occupational information. The Aspiring Tradeswomen program provides high-school young women enrolled in Chicago Public School's vocational shops with a support system of mentors and advice on how to succeed in a male-dominated workplace. CWIT's training program for women, the Technical Opportunities Program, celebrated its fifteenth year in 2002. The twelve-week program includes math tutoring, blue-print reading and job preparation. Our advocacy strategies consist of organizing our constituency to promote tradeswomen's rights; conducting research to document the problems and developing policy recommendations; challenging discrimination and institutional barriers through policy campaigns, media, technical assistance and legal actions; partnering with targeted constituents and coalition building with colleagues. CWIT members educate government leaders on the continued need for affirmative action and preparatory training courses for women in the trades. CWIT's staff also assists manufacturers on recruitment techniques for women and provides training to Illinois Department of Human Services caseworkers on assessing and exploring non-traditional careers with female, former welfare recipients. CWIT provides publications on how to replicate our award winning programs to organizations nationwide. CWIT continues to advance the power of women and girls individually, and as a community, with more work choices and opportunities for success.

The ten of us Chicks searched high and low for a site that was only for women, only about investing, and easy to understand. Oh yeah, and it had to be fun. We wanted to learn how to invest in the stock market without it involving a lot of risk, or taking up too much of our time. We've figured out how that the best way to do all of this was through an online investment club. Just one small hurdle, we had to create the web site!
